

What Benefits Will YOUR Organization Gain From Technology Change Management?

Employ change management practices for your next technology transition and see the potential for these rewards:

A Faster Adoption Rate:

Time is money; the sooner your staff is comfortable using the new technology, the quicker your organization will achieve ROI.

Consistent/Efficient Application:

Inconsistent use of technology leads to workarounds and other operational gaps. Getting everyone to use the technology properly and harnessing its true potential establishes a standard for your staff that is critical for meeting the rigors of government compliance and other regulatory requirements.

Staff That's In Alignment With Leadership's End Goals:

Your organization's greatest opportunity for success is when everyone understands and is working toward the same objectives. Such a concerted effort forms a sense of ownership among your staff and leads to greater dedication and satisfaction when they can share in the organization's wins from a more personal level of contribution and accomplishment.

Minimizing Confusion That Can Compromise Security:

This is less obvious, and that is precisely the reason why cybercriminals have been targeting healthcare organizations during times of transition – with devastating results². M&A, for example, which has been on the rise in the home-based care industry, presents a prime opportunity for cybercriminals to strike while organizations are so focused on other priorities that technologies may be left more vulnerable to an attack.

Higher Staff Satisfaction And Retention:

When you make employees feel included in a change, you establish trust and respect that are building blocks of loyalty.

Improved Patient Outcomes:

Your organization's operational performance has a direct impact on the care you provide; achieve your optimum goals for alignment, communication, and efficiency through properly managed technology changes, and you will see better patient results that potentially result in higher reimbursements and more referrals.